Be bold! Do justice! Wisconsin women grow into advocacy

by Shirley Paulson

“DO JUSTICE, LOVE MERCY, and walk humbly with our God” (Micah 6:8).

How did a bunch of modest Lutheran women grow into bold advocates helping to end human trafficking in Wisconsin? It was a journey of faith and calling. We started from a place where many did not believe that sex trafficking was a problem in our state. And hardly any of us felt comfortable talking about anything that had to do with sex (shhhh!).

Now, a few short years later, we have grown to be some of the loudest voices in support of three bills in our state.

The more we learned about this horrible crime, the bolder we got. We followed a pattern championed by Cherish All Children, a Lutheran organization that works to prevent child sexual exploitation and trafficking. Their model suggests we Pray, Educate, Connect, and Act.

The first two were easy. We’re Lutheran women, after all. Praying and educating are as natural as breathing for us. But connecting and acting were a different story.

PRAY: After learning about the problem of human trafficking, we prayed for the victims and listened to hear what God was calling us to do. We encouraged others to engage the power of prayer by proposing a resolution—A Time of Prayer to End Human Trafficking—at our synod assembly in 2016, the churchwide assembly in New Orleans in 2016, and Women of the ELCA’s triennial convention in Minneapolis in 2017. We compiled prayer petitions for each day from January 11 through Super Bowl weekend and shared the prayers via church and synod newsletters.

EDUCATE: We felt God calling us to organize an event to educate ourselves and others about human trafficking. More than 300 people attended, and they were so generous in their offerings. We were able to use the money we budgeted for our event to offer seed grants to Women of the ELCA groups to hold trafficking awareness events.

CONNECT: Connecting with others helped us grow as advocates. We were venturing out of our comfort zones but soon connected with two Catholic nuns. They helped us plan our first awareness event, and they became our friends. They taught us about other groups, all begun by bold people passionate about helping victims and addressing the root causes of human trafficking.

Studying God's word is the second mark of discipleship

CHRISTIAN DISCIPLESHIP is a lifelong journey of living out and spreading the good news of Jesus Christ so that others may believe. In the spring 2019 issue of Interchange, we included the first of seven acts of discipleship—praying — found in our downloadable free resource: "Lessons for Today's Disciples." Over the next few issues, we will explore the remaining marks of discipleship.

The second lesson of discipleship is studying God's word.

Studying God's word is fundamental to the process of discerning, understanding, articulating, and applying the meaning of God's word in the life of a disciple. This lesson will highlight standard practices that were followed by disciples in the early church.

When Jesus was about 12, he went to the Temple to study and listen to the elders. Studying God's word in community is one mark of discipleship. It is essential to be with each other so that as we study God's word and pray, we grow in faith together. Community is the activator that encourages us and others to grow. Jesus always taught in community because that is where his ministry took place. Jesus frequently spoke to his disciples in parables and explained to them in community so that they might struggle together to find a common understanding.

Read Acts 2:42–47. This was an exciting time for the new church. Peter was preaching the good news, and thousands of new believers were coming into the community. In studying God's word, hearing the apostles' teachings, fostering fellowship, breaking bread together, gathering to pray, and sharing financial resources, the community came alive. When we study together, we begin to see that the mission is larger than any one person could imagine or accomplish. Fellowship, which comes from studying in community, gives disciples opportunities to build deeper relationships with God and with others as brothers and sisters in God's family.

Reflect on verse 42 and make a list of the opportunities available to you for studying God's word in community and fellowship.

"Lessons for Today's Disciples" was written by Valora K Starr, director for discipleship for Women of the ELCA. You can find the resource by visiting welca.org/resources and searching for its title.

One of the best connections we made is with our Lutheran Office of Public Policy in Madison, Wis. Director and pastor Cindy Crane has become our mentor and point person for advocacy at the state capitol. She provides us with updates on bills and notifies us when it is time to contact legislators.

ACT: We became bolder in our advocacy, acting to end human trafficking in more ways. We serve on a workgroup of Wisconsin's Anti Human Trafficking Task Force. We make recommendations for resources to educate young people about the dangers of trafficking. We sponsored an advocacy training event with a state representative talking about civic engagement and workshops on how to help with specific issues. We featured speakers on human trafficking at our convention and conference events. We joined with women from other synods and sent hundreds of postcards identifying ourselves as Women of the ELCA and asking our legislators to support anti-trafficking bills. We arranged carpools to get women to the capitol to attend a committee hearing on the Safe Harbor for Trafficked Youth bill and filled the hearing room.

One of the most satisfying things we did was attend a Human Trafficking Advocacy Day at the capitol. There, we visited our state senators and representatives to convince them to co-sponsor the Safe Harbor bill. Which they did.

So how did women in our synod grow from concerned but shy Christians into strong advocates to end human trafficking? We did what we felt God was calling us to do, one step at a time, one act leading to another, using what we had learned and the connections we had made.

We will continue to grow in being bold and doing justice. And you can too!

Organization commits to growth even as revenues decline

WOMEN OF THE ELCA'S EXECUTIVE BOARD continues to explore ways to grow the organization, holding up the Caribbean Synod as an example.

"I can't help but smile when I think about what is happening in the Caribbean Synod," Executive Board President Lisa Plorin said during the board's biannual meeting, April 26–28, in Chicago.

When Hurricane Maria devastated Puerto Rico in 2017, "our sisters lost so much. And that includes their documentation and unit constitutions."

About 80 women from 23 congregations in the Caribbean Synod gathered in mid-January to talk about how to remain committed to Women of the ELCA. The event, coordinated by the churchwide organization, was an effort to find ways to support the synod following the hurricane.

"Like Katie Luther these resilient women are up and thriving," Plorin said. "They are living out our mission statement by growing in faith, affirming their gifts, supporting one another in their callings, engaging in ministry and action, and promoting healing and wholeness in their church.

"If they can do this, so can every other synodical organization."

New units, new future

In another example of growth, the executive board approved a new special unit based at Egner Chapel at Muhlenberg College in Allentown, Pa.

In her application for a special WELCA Campus Unit, the Rev. Kristen Glass Perez, college chaplain and director of religious life at Muhlenberg, said she is "excited about exploring the possibilities for new programs, partnerships, and service with Women of the ELCA."

The new campus unit plans to address human trafficking, domestic violence, immigration, and racial justice.

Meanwhile, executive board members responded to a report from a newly formed exploratory committee that is looking into the organization's future by answering three questions posed by the committee. Anyone can answer the questions at welca.org/future.

The new exploratory committee formed two subcommittees. One committee will review any proposed constitutional changes, and the other will oversee surveys and examine the data.

In other action, the executive board:

- installed a new board member, Raeann Purcell of New Smyrna Beach, Fla. (Florida/Bahamas Synod), to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Anissa Canova, of Gouldsboro, Pa.
- approved a recommendation to move up to $250,000 from the New Ministries Fund to cover operational expenses due to a shortage in revenue. Because the revenues fell short of the budget, no funds were added to the reserves for the Eleventh Triennial Convention (2020) as earlier budgeted.
- implemented a plan for each executive board member to establish and strengthen a personal relationship with three synodical presidents. Through these relationships, the executive board will thank the presidents for their support, offer assistance, and:

How do issues get before our triennial convention?

WHEN WOMEN GATHER in convention and need to conduct business, a formal method is needed for presenting and acting on business. If we didn't have that, a convention could quickly devolve into something like an unruly classroom. We conduct organizational business through the formal method of resolutions and memorials. This might seem antiquated in today's informal world where people communicate through social media, but that's the formal way to present business to a convention.

Think of a resolution as:

- a way to participate in the democratic process and have your voice heard,
- a means of educating women about a particular need or concern,
- a vehicle for inspiring others to take a particular action.

Resolutions are also a way to plan and think ahead and to hold our community accountable for the commitments we make at conventions.

What's the difference between a resolution and a memorial?

A memorial is the way in which one expression of our organization formally makes a request of another. A memorial comes to a triennial convention by and through actions taken at a synodical women's organization.

Imagine a synodical convention considering a resolution that has as one of its actions a request that the churchwide organization produce resources around a given theme or that the executive director communicate the organization's position on a topic to an elected official. The resolution, once adopted in the SWO convention, becomes a memorial to the triennial convention. The SWO, through the resolution, is memorializing the issue, asking the triennial convention to consider the subject and take an action.

So why talk about resolutions now?

The Eleventh Triennial Convention (2020) will be held in July 2020. As we meet this year in synodical conventions, what issues should come to the triennial convention, the highest legislative authority in our organization?

Should Women of the ELCA address climate change or refugee issues? World hunger or human trafficking? These and more topics? Which expression can best address a given issue? Congregational units, synodical organizations or the churchwide organization? Will our call to act be within the organization only or will we extend the call to others? To our congregations? Or involve ecumenical or interfaith partners?

Now is the time, when you are meeting in synodical conventions, to take actions to be considered by the triennial convention in 2020.

The deadline for submitting memorials to the Eleventh Triennial Convention (2020) is November 30, 2019. All memorials must have been considered and acted upon by an SWO in convention.

Executive board nominations open July 30–November 30

THE ELEVENTH TRIENNIAL CONVENTION of Women of the ELCA is July 14–16, 2020 in Phoenix, Arizona. The voting members to the convention, the highest legislative body of Women of the ELCA, will elect four officers and 17 women to serve on the churchwide executive board as part of the business they will conduct.

The president and vice president are elected at the convention by nominating ballot; thus no advance nominations are needed for these two positions. See the churchwide women's organization constitution Article XIV, Section 5, items 1–2. Find the constitution at welca.org/toolsforleaders.

Nominations will be received by the nominating committee for secretary, treasurer and board members. These position descriptions are online. You should obtain the consent of the person being nominated before submitting her name for consideration.

In the fall—September, October and November—Gather subscribers will study selections of Old Testament poetry from Job, Psalms and Lamentations.

Drawing from the experiences of these ancient writers, readers will learn to look for God in times of deep emotions, such as joy, anger, celebration, depression, misunderstanding and contentment, finding hope and grace along the way.
